

THE NEW ENGLAND JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL & COMPARATIVE LAW
CALL FOR PAPERS

Topic: International Criminal Court (ICC)

Calling all authors:

The New England Journal of International and Comparative Law is currently accepting articles relating to the International Criminal Court to mark the 10th anniversary of the entry into force of the Rome Statute in July 2012. We are reaching out to those with experience in this area. We would greatly appreciate if you have an article you would care to submit to the New England Journal of International and Comparative Law relating to the ICC.

The Journal is currently looking for preferably articles ranging from 10-15 pages in length, 5,000 to 7,500 words. Issues we would want to address in the journal include (i) Has the ICC met the interests of the Victims, in particular in terms of representation; (ii) The perspective of defense counsel; (iii) the true extent of Prosecutorial discretion; (iv) the success and failings of the first cases; and (v) State cooperation. We are also interested in papers analyzing the role of the UN Security Council in enabling the work of the ICC over the past decade and the challenge posed by the stance of the United States. We would be willing to discuss other topic ideas that an author may have.

The articles from this call for submission will be published by the Spring or Summer of 2012. We request that any articles be completed and submitted to the New England Journal of International and Comparative Law by February 1, 2012. Additionally, we may invite authors to come to speak at the New England School of Law located in Boston in March of 2012 to discuss their articles. All submissions and questions should be directed to the Journal's email account at nejicl@gmail.com.

Warmest regards,

Alicia Kimi
